

ABSTRACT

A method for management of the programming controls in a multilevel device is provided. During the control step cells are not controlled all together but they are conveniently selected in order to reduce the source resistance and consumption
5 effect, but without penalizing change times.